

Jay Oglesby, Freelance Web Developer

Statement on Religious Freedom

Adopted October 28, 2026

This is the opinion and mode of operation for Jay Oglesby only, and does not reflect the views of his clients:

Basically, I'm happy to serve anyone.

I am – or at least try to be – a serious, unapologetically Bible-believing Christian. But being Bible-believing is a fallacy if one is not also Bible-reading. Unlike some Christian web developers that have made headlines for using their faith as a license to discriminate against others; I, also a Christian web developer, believe it is contrary to the direct teachings of Christ to discriminate against others (Matthew 5:40-42).

While I reserve the right to withdraw from agreements that would actively harm others or deny Christ, my faith teaches me in no uncertain terms to serve my neighbor, especially those who disagree with me.

Look, if you want a website and you're not hurting anyone, I'll make you a website. My Master would. He was more into carpentry, but the principle still applies.
